Alternative offers give you the option of admission to a different, but closely related, program than the one to which you had originally applied.

Although you have not been made an offer to the Collaborative Nursing program, the offer of admission provided will allow you to pursue your studies in the Faculty of Health at York University. We have extended an offer to our Global Health program and our Health Studies program. A short description of each is provided below.

Global Health

Taught by professors from all Faculty of Health programs, including the School of Nursing, our Global Health program is one of the most comprehensive programs in health at York. You may be interested in such courses as Chronic Disease and Care, as well as Anatomy and Physiology for Human Health. Completing a degree in Global Health provides you with a foundation to pursue any health-related career locally or on the global stage. Students in their fourth year have an opportunity to do a field placement either locally or internationally. Maclean’s Magazine has listed York’s Global Health degree as one of York’s “Standout” programs.

Health Studies

Doctors and nurses rely upon health managers, information specialists and policy experts to ensure that our health care system serves our needs and is sustainable. In Health Studies students take courses in management, informatics and policy, as well as study the breadth and depth of health and health care through a wide variety of issues and social contexts (e.g. status and disability, homelessness), including case studies in health care in the community. Health Studies offers students the flexibility to attain a double major or do a minor in other Faculty of Health or York programs. The program also provides students with the prerequisites for postgraduate study in a professional program (e.g. medicine, law) or graduate school.
